Testing

Is the testing strategy used fit for purpose?	You have recruited an adequate number of participants. You also provided a completed exit survey, four consent forms, a test script and a mini user journey, which is commendable.

How convincing is the recording and interpretation of the feedback provided?	You have provided a usability testing report, but the testing findings and actions are not provided, which is an essential part of the report. Findings should discuss the key issues that have been identified, either positive or/and negative, closely related to your observations and any exit surveys. Actions include changes your group has decided on in response to the initial testing and any subsequent test sessions.

Does the new version of the page convincingly incorporate the feedback collected?	The new version of the page is provided based on the testing results and feedback. However, it is very difficult to identify the changes incorporated in the new version since findings and actions are not provided.
